

Keebler Bug Bites

By Barb Nicoletti - Are the children tired of the same old snack? Do you venture to the grocery store and the children nag for you to buy them something and when you get it home, they decide they do not want it any longer? Well this has happened to me on more than one occasion. I have a whole shelf full of opened uneaten boxes of snacks geared towards kids. Most of them I end up nibbling on or eventually have to toss away.

Well, I stumbled across a relatively new product made by those little Keebler Elves in the tree called Bug Bites. No I know what you are thinking, treats for kids shaped like bugs, Yuk. Well, they come in several different shapes and sizes, from cute little ladybugs, to butterflies. These snacks not only great tasting, but the kids love them and gobble them up. Do not get me wrong; these buggie snacks are not only for children, I found them to be great tasting and interesting conversation piece for adults as well. In general, they are cinnamon flavored graham crackers shaped like little bugs.

These little bugs contain no trans fat, no dairy, no eggs, no nuts, no peanuts, no seeds, but do have a tad bit of sugar 9g for about 13 crackers, which is why the kids probably love to eat them up.

These snacks can be found in your local grocery store, no need for a special trip to a specialty shop or order off the Internet. Bug Bites can be found in the Keebler section with all of the other cookies and crackers.
